Revising and updating the Minimum Standards for Child Protection in Humanitarian Action, 2017-2019

Much has changed since the CPMS were first developed in 2012. As the global standards for child protection in emergencies, the CPMS must address today’s humanitarian realities and incorporate all the latest evidence.

June - September 2017, Survey: We asked users worldwide what needed to be added or updated for the CPMS to remain relevant in their context. What’s missing? What should remain? How can we ensure that the CPMS meet the needs of first responders and local organizations?

Identify participants: What expertise is needed for the revision? Who should be consulted? How can we ensure an inclusive and participatory process?

September: Revision launch workshop. Issue guidance for drafting groups and focal points.

June - September 2017, Survey:

- Online survey and feedback tool;
- Consultation workshops;
- Webinar consultations.

Based on the feedback and input from the open consultations, writing groups will develop third drafts by the end of 2018.

Consultations will be held with reference groups and advisory groups (specialists such as human rights professionals, donors, government representatives and humanitarians from other sectors).

Develop draft four. Finalization workshop in Q1 2019.

Edit, translate, develop visuals and format, digital and print versions.

Roll out and implementation at agency and country levels!

Launch events, webinars, training and online guidance.

Update the Humanitarian Standards Partnership app and make the second edition of the CPMS available to all our users.
